In creating my homework for this week I definitely spent most of my time on the tiles. The full comp was fairly straight forward once I picked which one my client and I liked more. She didn't really have a preference and kept saying "which ever was easiest for me". She didn't understand that since we already had a layout picked out we were basically deciding colors. So I went with the tile that had a stronger contrast between the different colors. Especially for the background and the header and navigation bar backgrounds. I think the tile method works the best for me. However, there is definitely still a place for the full comp when it comes to actually programming the website because I know what I want it to look like and I can build from there. So I guess I could "get by" with out a full comp, but I would like to make one if time allowed.
